Turfware at a glance

Turfware

One system for orders, harvest, delivery and invoicing, built on a turf farm.

Turfware started with Anthony Heilig, a turf farmer who wanted to step back from the day to day and still know exactly what was happening on his farm. We tested over 20 systems before we built our own, together, on his farm. Over 15 million square metres of turf has since gone through it, at farms in Queensland, New South Wales and South Australia.

One order, the whole way through: office, harvest, delivery, customer, invoice.

The four parts

The web app, for the office

Orders, customers, pricing, freight, truck runs, customer emails, reporting and setup, in one place.

The Harvesting App, for the paddock

An iPad app for the harvest and forklift crew. The day's cut sheet by variety, marked off as it's cut and staged.

The Delivery App, for drivers

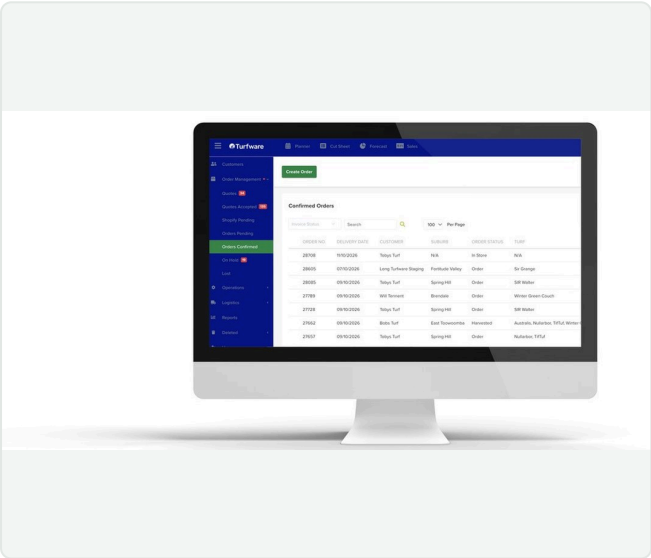

Runs, directions, the site contact and order notes on the driver's phone, and proof of delivery with a photo and signature.

Sawfish, for invoicing and payments

Invoices come off the order and sync through Sawfish to MYOB or Xero. Customers pay by card, PayTo, PayID, Tap to Pay, Apple Pay or Google Pay.

How an order moves

1. The order goes in once, in the office. Turf, freight, installation and products price themselves from your settings and the customer's segment.
2. On confirmation it lands on the harvest crew's cut sheet for its harvest date, and on the delivery board for its delivery date.
3. The crew mark it Harvested, then Ready To Dispatch. The office watches it happen on the live Cut Sheet.
4. The driver delivers, takes a photo and gets a signature. The customer is emailed the proof automatically.
5. The invoice is generated from the order and sent through Sawfish, which syncs it to your accounting system.

Confirmed orders in the web app.

Why farms use it

- Nobody rewrites the same order three times.
- Office, harvest crew and drivers work from the same order, live.
- Every delivery has a photo, a signature and a time against it.
- One price: $1,000 a month, unlimited users, every feature. No setup fee.
